NOTES FROM THE NATIONAL CAPI-

TAL.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Dec. 21, 1875.

Until Tuesday last Congressional proceedings dragged slowly along, and hardly a ripple of excitement arose to gladden the reporters' heart or rouse from their seeming lethargy the Davids and Goliaths of the opposing hosts. The Gladiators who seemed so anxious last fall to enter the political arena and were handsomely entertained, wind and feasted. The members of the Press who accompanied the party were entertained at a banquet given by the journalists of Philadelphia. The Centennial Board of Commissioners are asking an appropriation of one million and half of dollars to enable them to complete the building, and defray other expenses incident to opening the exhibition.

THE CENTENNIAL EXCURSION.

The weakness of the modern Congressman seems to be the conviction that he is born financier of the first water, and knows better than any other man just what sort of a financial policy this country requires. The diversity of plans for relieving the prevailing financial difficulties and getting things straight again which have been set up will be apparent to Congress enough to puzzle a pretty level headed man, and dissipate or muddle any tolerably correct ideas which he may have in mind on the subject. Congress will be fairly deluged with schemes of this sort, and some wild opinions will be vented.

THE OLD JAIL.

The Old Jail Building which stands on Judiciary Square in this city was vacated a few days ago and the prisoners removed to the New Jail in another part of town. The old prison has a history. Many noted criminals were confined within its damp walls. Many men have stepped from its gloomy cells to the scaffold. General Sieckle was here held in duration while on trial for his life for the shooting of Philip Barton Key. John H. Suratt was an occupant of one of its cells when tried for conspiracy in the assassination of President Lincoln. For a portion of the time, R. B. Irwin was in contempt of the House he was held in this jail, and Whittemore, the California correspondent, only escaped a like fate by timely explanation. The old place is deserted now, and will probably be pulled down. The New Jail is a splendid building, quite in contrast with the old as regards comfort and safety.

ADJOURNMENT.

Congress adjourned on Tuesday of this week for the Holidays. They will meet again on January the fifth, 1876.

THE FIRST GUN.

was, very appropriately, from Mr. Fort, of Illinois.

It was in a shape of a resolution declaring that in all subordinate appointments under any officer of the House, it is the judgment of the House that wounded Union soldiers, not disabled from the performance of their duty, be preferred. This was too strong a dose for the southern members, many of whom were in the Confederate army, and by a vote of 97 years to 134 days the House refused to second the demand for the previous question. An amendment was then offered by Mr. Cox, of New York, declaring that inasmuch as the union of all the States has been restored, all its citizens were entitled to equal consideration in the distribution of offices under the Government. The whole matter was then referred to the Committee on Accounts by a vote of 168 yeas to 102 nays. The Republicans voted solidly for, and the Democrats pretty generally against Mr. Fort's resolution.

EXTENDING THE PRESIDENTIAL TERM.

On Wednesday Mr. Randall, of Penn., offered a resolution to amend the Constitution so as to make the term of future Presidents six years instead of four and providing that they shall not be eligible for re-election. It was referred to the Judicial Committee.

NO SUBSIDIES.

On the same day Mr. Holman of Indiana offered a resolution declaring that in the present condition of financial affairs, it was, in the opinion of the House, inexpedient at this time to grant any subsidies to moneyed corporations or to provide public credit to any Corporation or Association engaged in private enterprises.

It was adopted by the large vote 218 years to 33 nays. This resolution excited a great deal of attention and comment and was looked upon by many as a declaration in advance of the Policy of Congress in regard to the Texas and Pacific Railway Guarantee and all questions of a like character. It is said, however, that quite a number of members who voted for it had subsidy bills of various kinds in their pockets which will be offered at the first opportunity. There is no doubt there is much trap in the above and similar resolutions, and those familiar with Congressional proceedings recollect that our Solons often begin their session with very virtuous resolutions and before the close manage to vote away large amounts of public money for various questionable purposes.

THIRD TERM.

The sensation of the day, however, was a resolution offered by Mr. W. W. Springer, of Illinois, declaring that in the opinion of the House, the precedent established by Washington and other Presidents in retiring from office after a second term, had become a part of our Republican system of Government, and that any departure from this time-honored precedent would be unwise, unpatriotic, contrary to the spirit of our institutions, and ought with great propriety to be resisted.

Mr. Blaine of Maine, who is popularly supposed to take a great interest in any question relating to the Presidential succession, vacated his seat and went out for a little fresh air and quietly communed with his own conscience as how he should cast his vote on this question. Unfortunately he did not get back again until after the vote was announced, and was unable to give his opinion. The Northern press of course, was greatly interested in this question and convened to discuss it and draw conclusions as to what was to be done. The circumstances his conduct in the matter was generally regarded as excusable, at least, if not altogether right and proper. There was no discussion or debate on this resolution and a vote was taken and resulted in the almost unanimous adoption of the resolution. The vote as announced was 222 yeas, to 18 nays. This resolution was regarded as a smart little
